The Middle East Water Forum is pleased to announce its next webinar devoted to the issue of transboundary water resources – covering both surface water and groundwater. While national water resource management has been an issue that is highlighted in connection with achieving the SDG's, and now the impact of COVID, in the years to 2030, in many regions the governance of transboundary waters is expected to be a more significant factor. While it would seem that the evolution of hydro diplomacy, international cooperation, implementation of some of the international water law conventions may well have stalled in the past few years.

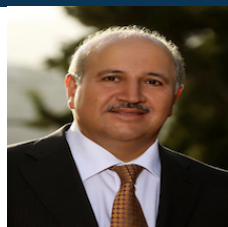

The aim of the webinar is provide information and opinion on current issues that affect transboundary water governance, a look ahead on key issues that are expected to emerge in the coming years up to the achievement of the SDG's by 2030 and the impact of COVID and its influence on socio-economics of the Middle East, North Africa and South Asian region.
